Because they have different world-views, but as for their differences, they are more significant than you might imagine. When you see a difference in the world, you see it as a difference in the world, not in the people that live in it. You see the differences between what one culture believes and how another culture behaves. This is what I mean by understanding.

Understanding is not just knowing the differences, it's knowing how to interpret those differences. It's knowing how to make sense of the world around you.

It's knowing how to interpret the world you live in.

To understand something, you need to know how it works, why it exists, and how it relates to other things. Understanding is not just knowing facts, it's knowing how to use those facts to make sense of the world. Understanding is not just knowing what something is, it's knowing how to use it.

It is true that the ocean is the most confounding space in the world. A reflection on our own mortality, it is so vast, so remote, so vast, so remote.

Perhaps, then, it is our connection to the ocean that drives our passion and our excitement at resonance. Our love for the ocean and the physical presence of its boundless capacity for the mind and the heart and the soul. The ocean, the intimacy of the landscape, the sea... how we connect with the ocean. How we feel it, how we sense it, how we experience it.

If it is somehow one of the few, if ever, one of the few people who has never heard of a book called ‘The Sun Also Rises’, you will be interested in this. I shall tell you something about it. It is, I suppose, a sort of a novel, but I have never read one like it. It is a book about a man called Hemingway, and it is true that he is a very good writer. He describes the life of a certain man, and how he survives the hardships of life in the wild, and how he finally succeeds in his mission. But the thing that strikes me most is the way he describes the land and the people. He brings alive the place and the people, and makes you feel as though you were there. It is a book that has touched me deeply, and I feel sure that it will have the same effect on you.
